I find this expression hard to understand, can someone explain me this? tree *root; For example, this is a pointer to the pointer which points to the root of my tree. (big surprise!) However, by using * root, what is the idea behind what I'm getting? A: *root means "the thing pointed to by root". If a pointer points to a tree, *root is a tree. If a pointer points to a pointer, *root is a pointer, and so on. In particular, (*root)->foo means "the thing pointed to by the thing pointed to by root". If a pointer points to a tree, *root->foo is a tree. If a pointer points to a pointer, (*root)->foo is a pointer, and so on. a consortium of researchers, testing and manufacturing companies, private sector firms, and pharmaceutical companies could help pave the way for more supportive policies and regulations. General regulatory frameworks, and the specific drug regulation processes of various states, could begin to evolve along the principles and practices of the above framework. Those developments will depend on the collaborative efforts of basic researchers, who continue to focus on understanding and characterising the neurobiology of addiction, and of the relevant addiction-related clinical sectors, whose varied practices 3da54e8ca3
